

Boso v Italy

State was found not to have violated the European Convention since Italian law on the voluntary termination of pregnancy strikes a fair balance between the woman's interests and the need to ensure protection of the unborn child, and the potential father does not have a right to be consulted about his wife's intention to have an abortion